

I find this action to be completely unacceptable in a number of different ways. Cellular service is taken for granted in the major population centers of the country, but to cut this funding would single out those of us located in the rural areas as if we are not as important as those living in major cities. I find this action both as I said unacceptable and appalling to think that the FCC would single out an unbelievable amount of the population and tell them that not only their safety in regards to having cellular service but also their right to have the same opportunities afforded to them as to other is unbelievable. To cap the universal service fund will not only single out these individuals but would also hinder the growth of the United States as a place where everyone is treated equally, no matter where you live.
